AN attractive booklet has been published by Hagley Community Association to stimulate interest in the association's affairs and especially its community centre project. In the foreword, Viscount Cobham writes: "Of all the ills of civilisation, loneliness is one of the wrost. It is also often unnecessary, and not infrequently means that the lonely person feels unable to make the first step. The new proposed community centre in Hagley is a splendid project and one which should enjoy the wholehearted support of those who believe that even in this machine age the individual is all-important and is at his best when in company with others of like tastes and interests." Mr. A. H. Chattin (chairman of the association) describes its growth, and Miss I. I. Fletcher, a member of Hagley Historical and Field Society contributes an interesting history of the parish. A description of the proposed centre is given by Mr. W. Nicholls (vice-chairman), who has also designed the booklet's cover.
